Is your Microsoft 365 + data secure?

In 2022, 85% of IT leaders using Microsoft 365 reported data loss incidents – this number is on the rise.

A staggering 90%+ of businesses either do not configure their Microsoft 365 correctly, don't use the full set of the tools available to them or don't use a fraction of the security features that are included (often leaving their teams and data at risk).

While Microsoft 365 offers a comprehensive suite of features for productivity, collaboration, and security; the specific risks associated with not fully implementing all features can vary based on the needs and circumstances of each business. By leveraging more of the 365 licence you already have, you can reduce the risk of threats exponentially.

Businesses within innovative sectors are leaving their 'IP' at risk

What are the risks of not leveraging more of your MS 365 tools and security features? »»

Security Vulnerabilities

Incomplete implementation of security features may leave your organisation vulnerable to cyber threats. For example, not using Advanced Threat Protection (ATP) or other security measures could increase the risk of malware and phishing attacks.

Data Loss and Leakage

Failure to implement data protection features, such as Data Loss Prevention (DLP), may expose the business to the risk of sensitive data being unintentionally shared or leaked, leading to regulatory compliance issues and reputational damage.

Identity and Access Risks

Inadequate implementation of identity and access management features, like Multi-Factor Authentication (MFA) or Conditional Access, could result in unauthorised access to sensitive information and compromise user accounts. Lack of MS365 policy or poor policy management is often a leading cause of access risk.

Collaboration and Productivity impact

Businesses may miss out on the full potential of collaboration and productivity if they do not fully implement key MS365 features. This can impact communication, collaboration, and cause overall in-efficiency.

Regulatory Compliance Challenges

Depending on the industry and geographic location, businesses may be subject to specific regulatory requirements. Failure to fully implement compliance-related features in Microsoft 365 can lead to non-compliance and potential consequences.
